“I try to read people’s lives,” says photographer Mario Marino. In this new photo book, the Austrian-born camera artist presents over 220 color and black-and-white photographs from some of the most remote areas of Ethiopia, Tanzania, Sudan, and Kenya.

Stunning landscapes combine with powerful portraiture, capturing in particular remote communities whose heritage and ways of life are threatened by the combined forces of tourism, technology, and globalization.

With his subjects illuminated by the sunlight alone, particular attention is given to traditional markers upon the body: face paint, hair styles, and jewelry. Beyond simple reportage or documentation, Faces of Africa strives to create a timeless portrait that speaks to the deep geographical and cultural roots of each individual.

▶ Stunning photo portraits and landscapes capture Africa’s ethnic and cultural diversity
▶ Expressive photo art: over 220 color and black-and-white pictures from, among others, Ethiopia, Kenya, Sudan, and Tanzania
▶ A new book from award-winning photographer Mario Marino, following museum and gallery exhibitions around the globe e. g. at National Portrait Gallery, London and The Empty Quarter Gallery, Dubai

Art, war, carnival, or cult—masks have two sides. They conceal and hide, and at the same time create new personalities, strange and captivating at once. So, too, do masks reveal world views of time and place. Masks from Africa, medieval knight helmets, fantasy masks of famous film heroes like Darth Vader, or gas masks and VR glasses as modern functional objects.

Fire is the fourth element. It destroys and creates something new. In its heat, colors, and magnitude, it provides a terrifying spectacle as much as an existential threat. Today, it speaks as much to the fragility of human structures as to the damage wrought on nature: the fire at Notre Dame Cathedral in Paris, forest fires from the Amazon to Australia, and infernos from Congo to California so colossal that the sky turned red.

For its ninth cycle the Prix Pictet highlights compelling images of our society and environment by some of the leading photographic artists of our times.

A powerful collection of photographic art for anyone interested in sustainability, climate change, and biodiversity.

Following the award ceremony and exhibition at the Victoria & Albert Museum, London, in December 2021, further exhibitions follow in Tokyo, New York, and other cities around the globe.
